

The 'Academy' series

This month we feature introductions from Steve Chamberlain, many of which derived from seedlings.

We also provide a list of the latest hostas to be granted an Award of Garden Merit (AGM)...

Growing from seed

We are getting more enquiries from gardeners about developing their own hosta cultivars and are often asked to supply seed.

As we are anxious not to mislead customers, there are two reasons we do not do this. Firstly, h. ventricosa is the only self fertile species which produces plants true to type. See December 2009 newsletter for more information. Secondly, plants grown in a garden situation produce open pollinated seeds from random fertilisation. Anything 'different' amongst the resulting seedlings is pure serendipity. Dedicated Plant Breeders undertake pollination in strictly controlled situations, where they are able to name both the pod and pollinating parents.

The Academy series

One breeder who has experimented extensively with open-pollinated seeds is Steve Chamberlain.

He uses the prefix Academy for his introductions, in honour of the street in Manlius, New York State where he lives.

Over the years we have enjoyed reading his contributions to the American Hosta Society's Journal.

In his article 'The Grandchildren of hosta 'Ginko Craig', which was published in Volume 33, Number 2, he discusses some surprising results from experiments with open pollinated seedlings of h. 'Ginko Craig'. This programme was born out of the desire to find interesting flowers, rather than new variations in leaf shapes and colours. It is well worth a read if you are keen to take the subject further.

H. 'Academy Celeborn'

Steve has reserved his use of Tolkien names for the varieties he has registered from his experimentation with the h. 'Ginko Craig' seedlings. Varieties he registered between 2000 and 2005, from this research are: Academy Chetwood; Academy Dimholt; Academy Fangorn Forest; Academy Galadriel; Academy Isengard; Academy Lothlórien; Academy Mallorn; Academy Mirkwood; Academy Nazgul; Academy Palantir; Academy Rivendell and Academy Wethertop.

Unusual names

Steve has had fun naming his introductions over the years, with many fans of Tolkien's 'The Lord of the Rings' trying to source varieties with associated names.

Our own collection holds 10 of the 'Academy' series, but only one with a Tolkien name: h. 'Academy Celeborn'.

Next month

We would like to devote the newsletter to challenging growing environments, and we would like your input to the issue, so:

Please get in touch with us if you have any tips on growing your hosta in difficult soil conditions, especially chalky or sandy soils.

Our experience of growing on clay soil is quite extensive, but we have lots of customers who garden successfully on very different soils.

Many of you have shared your experiences over the years, so we think it is time to devote a newsletter to the subject.

Email Us and we will include your tips.

HOSTA AGM

The RHS published their latest Award of Garden Merit listings last month, for all the genus they survey.

The list contains many varieties we would recommend, together with some more surprising additions of varieties we have found to be prone to reversion!

The full list of hosta varieties has been transcribed here.

The majority of varieties listed have been newly added, and give anyone

The Hosta Register lists 52 varieties in the Academy series
